As a professional historian, presenting your research at national and international fora, both in print and at conferences, is an important part of your work. Some of you may already have gained some experience with it. The next level is to organize (international) seminars or edited volumes yourself. This two-day workshop in the international environment of Münster University is meant to upscale your ability to work in an international academic community.

Academics with an established network will share with you what they see as best practices and pitfalls. Together with PhD candidates from the RSPH program and colleagues from the University of Münster you will discuss the future of (open access) publishing, the practice and added value of conferencing in the digital age, and more. The workshop will result in a proposal for a symposium or a conference panel, co-created with one or two fellow PhD candidates.

Invited speakers

Dr. Erik de Lange (Utrecht University), dr. Frank Sterkenburgh (Utrecht University), prof. Dr. Sarah Albiez-Wieck (Centre for Empire Studies, University of Münster), dr. Kevin Lenk (Centre for Empire Studies, University of Münster).
